A Tale of Woe

Important to Sufferers From Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, etc.

Mr. W. E. Robertson.

"St. Louis Grocer and General Merchant, Editorial Department, St. Louis, Mo. 'Early last summer I became afflicted with heartburn. Frequently I was seized with Stomach Trouble and Indigestion. I lost flesh, my weight falling off from 175 pounds to 150. I worried along for six months, trying first one and then another friend's prescription, seeking a relief. My appetite was gone, and I couldn't have used any digestion if I had had it. Well, I chanced to read an advertisement in a St. Louis paper, in which the statement was made that Hood's Sarsaparilla was a cure for heartburn. I bought a bottle and began taking it, and just then new trouble began. What there was left of my stomach would

Tangle Up Like a Pretzel. If I ate as much as I thought of eating anything solid, and I knew that Hood's Sarsaparilla wouldn't do any more than make it turn a hand spring. But I was disappointed. A few doses of Hood's Sarsaparilla and I began to feel better. I could hardly believe it myself when I ate a half of a lobster and found that it really meant to remain with me over night. Gradually my Appetite Returned to Me. And I soon found I could eat most anything, and also began to gain flesh. I took 2 1/2 bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and then quit because I had to. My salary wouldn't justify any more to eat. I could sit down at a well filled table and eats a clear spot around myself in ten minutes. Thus briefly I have stated the narrative of the 'Fall and Rise of a Zealous Stomach,' over which I preside." W. E. ROBERTSON, ST. LOUIS.

A Moral Issue.

The challenge thrown down to the voters of the Seventh Kentucky district, by Col. Breckinridge, is a challenge to the electors of every district in the union, and raises the issue whether good moral character is to be regarded as a necessary qualification for public office. Adultery is everywhere an offense under the statute, and in some of its forms punishable as a felony. If the crimes of the persistent libertine are to be condoned, and the perpetrator, when detected and dragged to the bar of justice and public opinion, can escape political and social ostracism because of his great name and by reason of his very defiance, then there should be an end to any moral qualification for office.

Col. Breckinridge insolently declares he has no justification, no palliation to offer for his crime, and asks no condonation, from the people. In grandiloquent phrases and with supreme egotism he proceeds to draw in all his speeches a parallel between himself and David of old. But the parallel is not true either in the nature of their crimes or in their repentance. The crime of David, in its inception, was the result of sudden and fierce temptation presented to him through an innocent accident. The Col. deliberately delivered himself over to temptation, himself seeking it out. But David did not after a time cast aside the partner of his guilt to be scorned and loathed of men, but repaired his wrong to her as far as in his power it lay, by making her his queen who afterward became the mother of Solomon. This modern self-styled David, however, after he had satisfied his devilish lusts, cast aside with heartless egotism his partner in sin, declaring at the same time that such breaches of the moral law "ruin the woman, but only injure the man."

David repented of his sin with exceeding deep and bitter repentance, as witness the 51st Psalm. But Col. Breckinridge, in all his public utterances, utters only notes of defiance. David when convicted of his sin made a clean breast of the whole matter. This modern David when called to face the bar of public opinion, seeks to take advantage of every technicality of the law, searches out the vilest shapes of mankind in the slime of sin to still further blacken by perjury the character of his co-partner, and by the mouth of his counsel seeks to bring all his fellow-men under similar condemnation. The character of the defense was an aggravation of his crime.

Col. Breckinridge has for years occupied a large space in the public mind. He has been by his learning and his social and public position elevated as an example to those just entering public life. Herein lies the gravity of the question to be decided. He is self-confessedly guilty of the most loathsome social, legal and moral sins. We had lately in St. Louis, in the case of Clay Register Poeck, a somewhat similar case. The defense in that case, as it seems to be in Col. Breckinridge's, was that a public officer does not give his moral powers, but only his mental and business qualifications to the public service. But it cannot be denied that a man gives the very highest mental and business powers of which he is capable to the public when he accepts office. It is then not difficult of proof that the man who debases his moral character by vicious indulgences cannot do this, but of necessity impairs every part of his manhood—physical, mental and spiritual.

What shall the people answer then? Shall they indeed say good morals count for naught in making up official character? The Supreme Rule of nations will hold the voters accountable for the manner in which they answer the question. For he hath declared "Righteousness exalts a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

Representative Bryan, of Nebraska, in speaking of the proposal to limit the operation of the income tax to five years, said: "If the law is unsatisfactory it could be repealed any time." But if it is limited to five years, it may then take a two-thirds majority to reenact it, assuming that we have a president who would veto it. We have had some experience of vetoes at this session, as witness the seigniorage bill."

The following persons united with the Keytesville Methodist church Monday night on confession of faith in Christ: Mrs. C. F. Owen, Misses Bessie Crawley, Della Crawley, Nellie Carmon, Lela Richardson, Pearl Myers, Annie Minter, Pearl Haston, and F. Carmon and Claude Owen, James Harned, Willie Drace, John Cline, Lilber Richardson, Frank Drace and Jesse Minter. Dr. W. T. Drace and wife were received by letter. The new additions on confession of faith are all new converts of the recent protracted meeting at the Methodist church. There are several other converts who will likely unite with other denominations.

"The mountain labored and a ridiculous mouse was born" sang Horace nineteen centuries ago. But it is still true to-day. The Signal which has been bellowing in travail for weeks past over the congressional matter, succeeded in bringing out the machinery of a primary election under the charge that a job was being put up to defeat Mr. Hall, when there was no other candidate in the field. And what is the result? Out of a total Democratic vote of 3463 there was cast for congressman in the primary 791 votes, one township (Mendon) not taking enough interest in the matter to cast a single vote.

Sheriff J. H. Weatherford and deputy, I. H. Fairholm, of Jefferson county, Kas., were in Keytesville Wednesday for the purpose of seeing Wm. Morris, one of the men who helped burglarize Fleetwood & Co.'s store at Triplett. From the best description given of Morris it was believed that he was one Hebbe, wanted in Jefferson county, Kas., for rape. The Kansas officers were unable to identify him, but received a telegram from one Seachney, at Kansas City, requesting that Morris be held. Zack May, the father of the young lady, whom Hebbe is charged with having assaulted, arrived Wednesday afternoon, and after seeing Morris said he was not the man wanted.

We Must Have Our Money.

It takes money to run a printing office, but it has been precious little of that necessity we have laid our clutches on lately. In December last we sent out statements to every one of our delinquent subscribers and published a statement in the COURIER in which we said that all whose subscription was not paid by February 15th, 1894, we would place their accounts in the hands of a collecting agency.

True to our word we placed $844.30 in the hands of the Merchants' and Traders' association, of St. Louis, and up to this time we have only succeeded in collecting about

We now propose to publish a list of all of those who do not pay up by May 18th, together with the amount owed by each delinquent and keep this list running in the COURIER for four weeks, and all who do not pay up by June 15th we shall bring suit against.

So, dear reader, if you are in arrears on subscription you will find it to your interest to see that our claims against you is settled by that time.

Yours Truly,

C. P. VANDIVER,
